28 Prayer for relief .....42

Affirmation.....43

1           4.       Most Nevadans have little hope of going up against a company like Uber without an
2 attorney. And most Nevadans don't have the money to pay for a lawyer out of their own pocket. Their
3 only hope of obtaining legal representation is to hire an attorney on contingency, who they will have to
4 pay only if they are able to eventually obtain relief. Because lawyers take on substantial risks and costs in
5 suing companies as powerful and aggressive as Uber—which have all the resources in the world to draw
6 out litigation and play hardball—many charge the industry average rate of between 33% to 40% just to 7 stay afloat. A contingency fee is the only way that ordinary people can go toe-to-toe with companies like 8 Uber and vindicate their rights. It is their only “key to the courthouse.” Kritzer Decl. ¶ 34.

10           5.       That's exactly why Uber now has contingency fees in its sights. As more and more
11 sexual-assault survivors' claims get consolidated into a nationwide case, Uber wants to stop survivors
12 from hiring lawyers. Its proposal “would impose by far the most extreme barrier on people's ability to 13 hire counsel of any state in the nation.” Hinkle Decl. ¶ 4. As the world's leading expert on contingency
14 fees explains, the proposal “would sharply decrease the availability of legal services in Nevada.” Kritzer
15 Decl. ¶ 6. Innumerable everyday Nevadans would be worse off, from sexual-assault survivors to police 16 officers injured keeping the rest of us safe.
17

18           6.       And Nevada taxpayers would lose out too. When people aren't compensated for their 19 injuries by the parties responsible (like Uber), that ends up depriving Nevada Medicaid of millions of 20 dollars in healthcare reimbursements that it would otherwise receive. As the Nevada Coalition of Legal 21 Services Providers explains, this would have “a profound and lasting impact” on the State's treasury and,
22 “in human terms, the loss of access to justice for Nevada families would be enormous.” Sasser-Norman 23 Decl. ¶ 48. No wonder Uber's proposal doesn't disclose this.
24

25           7.       If Nevada voters knew what was really at stake with Uber's proposal, they would reject it
26 out of hand. So Uber has tried to do what it has done in other states: create “voter confusion” through 27 “obfuscation.” Koussa v. Att'y Gen. of Mass., 489 Mass. 823, 829–30, 833 (2022) (striking Uber's initiative
28

1 from the ballot). It created a PAC with a misleading name, funded a misleading PR campaign, and even
2 made misleading statements about which groups support the proposal. And it announced that the
3 initiative was designed to “put victims first.” But its conduct reveals that, as advocates for survivors put it,
4 “Uber has consistently put survivors of sexual assault last.” London Decl. ¶ 31.

6 8. Fortunately, Nevada law has safeguards against these kinds of efforts to deceive the 7 electorate. If the public is misled about the purpose or effects of an initiative, instead of promoting
8 democracy, “the electors’ will could be subverted on an important ballot question.” Jones v. Heller, 120
9 Nev. 1256, No. 43940, at 4 (Nev. Sept. 18, 2004) (unpublished order). The Nevada legislature has 10 entrusted courts with the important responsibility of guarding against this anti-democratic result. This is 11 just such a case. This isn’t the first time Uber has tried to sneak through initiatives to stop people from 12 being able to sue the company. This Court shouldn’t let Uber do in Nevada what it couldn’t get away
13 with elsewhere.

16
17 9. Uber Sexual Assault Survivors for Legal Accountability is an association of survivors—
18 former Uber passengers who were sexually assaulted or harassed by their Uber drivers—and the 19 advocates who seek justice on their behalf. Together, they seek to hold Uber accountable in court for its 20 repeated failure to implement appropriate safety precautions to protect its passengers. They file this 21 action to ensure that victims of sexual assault and sexual harassment who cannot afford to pay for 22 lawyers out of their own pockets will continue to have access to zealous and competent legal 23 representation in Nevada.

24
25 10. The Nevada Justice Association is an association of over 1,200 lawyers and judges who 26 strive to improve Nevada’s civil justice system and to ensure that the people of Nevada continue to have 27 undiminished access to the courts. The lawyers of NJA represent injured people in a wide range of civil 28 actions, from antitrust and civil rights to personal injury and sexual assault.

1           11.     Uber Technologies, Inc., is a Delaware corporate with its principal place of business at 2 1515 Third Street, San Francisco, California. Upon information and belief, Uber directs and funds the 3 “Nevadans for Fair Recovery” political action committee and the proposed “Nevadans for Fair
4 Recovery Act” initiative petition.

6           12.     Matt Griffin is a lawyer and lobbyist for Uber with the Griffin Company in Carson City,
7 Nevada. He is listed as the secretary and registered agent of the “Nevadans for Fair Recovery” PAC and 8 a proponent of the challenged petition.

9           13.     John Griffin is a lawyer and lobbyist for Uber with the Griffin Company in Carson City,
10 Nevada, and a proponent of the challenged petition.
11

12           14.     Scott Gilles is a lawyer and lobbyist for Uber with the Griffin Company in Carson City,
13 Nevada, and a proponent of the challenged petition,
14

15           15.     Tia White is the President of Operations with the Griffin Company in Carson City,
16 Nevada, Uber’s lobbying firm. She is listed as the treasurer of “Nevadans for Fair Recovery PAC” and a 17 proponent of the challenged petition.

18           16.     “Nevadans for Fair Recovery” is a newly formed Nevada political action committee
19 organized for the specific purpose of advocating for the challenged petition, S-04-2024, titled the 20 “Nevadans for Fair Recovery Act.”
21

22           17.     Francisco Aguilar is the Nevada Secretary of State and is sued solely in his individual
23 capacity. The Secretary of State is “the Chief Officer of Elections for this State” and “is responsible for 24 the execution and enforcement” of Nevada’s election laws. NRS 293.124(1). The Secretary’s duties also 25 include qualifying initiatives for submission to the Legislature and the electorate and disqualifying
26 initiatives that are determined to be invalid.

1 FACTUAL ALLEGATIONS

2 Uber’s sexual assault problem

3 18. Uber has a sexual assault problem. The company now faces hundreds of civil suits, with 4 more sure to come, by survivors who were sexually assaulted by their Uber drivers.

6 19. Approximately 250 such cases have been consolidated in a nationwide multidistrict
7 litigation (MDL) against Uber styled In re Uber Technologies, Inc. Passenger Sexual Assault Litigation. London
8 Decl. ¶ 2. That number is expected to grow substantially as hundreds more cases get transferred to the 9 MDL (in federal court in San Francisco) from states across the country, where similar incidents of sexual 10 assault and sexual harassment by unvetted Uber drivers continue to occur with troubling frequency. Id.

11
12 20. Nevada is no exception. Both in the MDL and in state court, Uber faces numerous civil 13 suits by survivors of sexual assault or harassment that took place in Nevada. London Decl. ¶¶ 22–24; see
14 generally Lansdown Decl. (collecting complaints). Recent cases in Nevada include:

15 21. An Uber driver who brutally raped his passenger, a twenty-year-old woman visiting Las 16 Vegas, after she fell asleep during an Uber ride. When she awoke, she pleaded for him to stop. He 17 ignored her pleas, strangled her until she was unconscious, then dropped her off at her destination and 18 threw her, her clothes, and her bag out of his car. Lansdown Decl. ¶¶ 2–3; London Decl. ¶ 23.

19
20 22. An Uber driver who stalked and harassed a woman for months after her Uber ride,
21 visiting her workplace numerous times, to the point that she had to get a restraining order. Lansdown
22 Decl. ¶ 8. Uber did nothing to help her. Id.

23
24 23. An Uber driver—later revealed to be a registered sex offender—who made repeated 25 crude comments about three young women’s physical appearance, insisted they smell a bottle of 26 unknown liquid and, when they declined to do so, sprayed one of the women, causing her to feel woozy
27 and fall asleep. Her sister woke her up, they escaped the vehicle, and were treated by paramedics.
28 Lansdown Decl. ¶ 7; Jacob Leavitt Decl. ¶¶ 4–8.

1           24.     An Uber driver who picked up a Nevada woman at the Cosmopolitan, dropped her off at 2 her home, then returned an hour later and entered her home as she slept. As she awoke, the Uber driver
3 held her arms back and began raping her. She kept telling him to stop, trying to kick him away. But he
4 continued to overpower her and sexually assaulted her without using any form of protection. Lansdown
5 Decl. ¶ 5; London Decl. ¶ 24.

7           25.     An Uber driver who facilitated the abduction and physical and sexual assault of a 14-
8 year-old girl. Lansdown Decl. ¶ 9.

9           26.     In these cases and others, survivors need legal representation to go up against a company
10 as large and powerful as Uber. Contingency fees allowed these survivors to retain counsel that could
11 bring civil cases against Uber seeking damages for the company's failure to implement appropriate safety
12 precautions. Jacob Leavitt Decl. ¶¶ 2-3, 12.

14           27.     Unfortunately, these episodes are far from isolated. And they come as no surprise to 15 Uber. Because Uber's transportation model requires riders to get in cars with complete strangers, in 16 many cases alone and at night, sexual assaults have always been a known and foreseeable risk.

18           28.     In 2019, under mounting public scrutiny, Uber admitted to receiving reports of 5,981
19 sexual assaults (in five categories) in the United States in the preceding two years. London Decl. ¶ 15.
20 These included 235 rapes, 280 attempted rapes, 1,560 groping incidents, 376 instances of unwanted 21 kissing of the breast, buttocks, or mouth, and 594 reports of unwanted kissing to another body part. Id.
22 And these numbers were only the tip of the iceberg because Uber reports data in certain categories and 23 withholds the rest. London Decl. ¶ 16.

1           29. Two years ago, Uber acknowledged that, as a consequence of the gaps in its background
2 checks, “we expect to continue to receive complaints from riders and other consumers, as well as actual
3 or threatened legal action against us related to Driver conduct.”<sup>2</sup>

5           30. Unlike the taxi industry, Uber conducts background checks using only the information a
6 driver provides. London Decl. ¶ 8. It doesn’t use biometric information, like fingerprints, and it doesn’t
7 check the FBI database used by the taxi industry. Id. When some states performed their own background
8 checks, 12–15% of drivers who were eligible under Uber’s standards flunked the official background
9 checks. Id.
10

11           31. Despite their known inadequacy, Uber relies on these flawed background checks as its 12 sole method for screening. London Decl. ¶ 9. It doesn’t meet its drivers in person or online. It doesn’t 13 interview them. It doesn’t require any references. It doesn’t contact prior employers. There are no drug
14 and alcohol tests. There are no exams.
15

16           32. To make things worse, Uber collected a “Safe Rides Fee” on hundreds of millions of rides
17 and made hundreds of millions in revenue as a result. But it never earmarked the money collected for 18 improving safety. The actual purpose of the “Safe Rides Fee” was to “add $1 of pure margin to each 19 trip.” London Decl. ¶ 11. As one former Uber employee said, “[w]e boosted our margins saying our 20 rides were safer. ... It was obscene.” Id.
21

22           33. Uber knows that its transportation system poses a particularly high risk for intoxicated
23 riders, especially intoxicated women. Nonetheless, Uber’s advertising disproportionately targets women,
24 with dedicated ad campaigns devoted to “driving women’s safety forward,” and markets its rides as a
25 safe option for intoxicated riders. London Decl. ¶ 12. Uber engages in joint marketing with alcohol
26

1 manufacturers and local bars, telling women that it is fine to have another drink because they have a ride
2 home. Id.

3 34. Uber knew this marketing was false. In the past, Uber gained riders' trust by advertising
4 "the safest rides on the road," saying that it sets "the strictest standards possible" and that it "aims to go
5 above and beyond local requirements" with "gold standard" and "industry leading" background checks.
6 London Decl. ¶ 13. Even after it paid more than $50 million to settle lawsuits based on this marketing,
7 Uber never told riders the truth. Id. Uber continues to mislead customers about its standards,
8 background checks, and safety record.

10 Uber's past efforts to write its own rules and silence survivors

11 35. In jurisdiction after jurisdiction, including Nevada, Uber's strategy has been the same: It
12 breaks the law, then writes its own rules. See generally Mike Isaac, Super Pumped: The Battle for Uber (2019).
13

14 36. Uber refuses to take any responsibility for allowing these assaults to occur and has instead
15 prioritized preventing survivors from suing the company.
16

17 37. Uber has aggressively lobbied for new laws, ballot initiatives, and regulations providing 18 that Uber is merely a technology platform, or a middleman between riders and drivers, and that it does 19 not control, direct, or manage its drivers and so cannot be held culpable for what occurs during a ride.
20 London Decl. ¶ 18. Uber spends millions of dollars annually in the U.S. alone on these lobbying efforts.
21 Id.

23 38. Uber routinely ignores existing laws and regulations whenever it enters a new market, 24 enabling itself to quickly onboard many drivers. London Decl. ¶ 19. This allows it to offer a service that 25 is immediately cheaper and more convenient than existing options, and therefore popular. Id. It then 26 harnesses this popularity to mobilize the public to oppose enforcement of existing laws against Uber and 27 to support new legal standards that Uber writes. Id.
28

1           39.     In Nevada, Uber leveraged its popularity to exempt itself from background-check
2 requirements, among other safety measures, imposed on taxi services. See Emily L. Dyer, Note, Need a
3 Ride? Uber: The Trendy Choice That Could Turn Threatening, 17 Nev. L.J. 239, 246–47 (2017). The 4 implications of Uber’s flouting of the law are especially grave in Nevada. “Nevada’s unique market and
5 customer base call for more intense safeguards. The state’s all-night lifestyle encourages many vulnerable
6 passengers to use Uber’s convenient service. The allure of using a mobile application to find a ride
7 home, along with the non-cash payment method, makes Uber an ideal choice for both tourists and locals
8 who have taken full advantage of the Vegas nightlife.” Id. at 254.

10           40.     Indeed, Uber has specifically targeted Nevada’s unique lifestyle through advertising that 11 encourages customers to “drink up, and Uber on.” Id. at 254.
12

13           41.     For years, Uber was successful in keeping survivors quiet and out of court. Until recently,
14 Uber required confidentiality as a condition of settlement with sexual assault survivors, effectively forcing
15 them to stay quiet so that the public would not learn about the true risks of riding with Uber. London
16 Decl. ¶ 25; see also, e.g., Watkins Decl. ¶¶ 6–7.
17

18           42.     And when survivors chose to come forward, Uber blocked them from going to court by 19 enforcing a forced arbitration clause in the fine print of its app. London Decl. ¶ 25. It stopped doing so
20 for claims of sexual misconduct only after public outcry at the height of the #MeToo movement.
21 London Decl. ¶ 26.
22

23           43.     On March 3, 2022, President Biden signed into law the Ending Forced Arbitration of 24 Sexual Assault and Sexual Harassment Act, Pub. L. No. 117-90, 136 Stat. 26 (2022), which prohibits
25 Uber from coercing survivors of sexual harassment or assault into binding arbitration. Despite Uber’s
26 lobbying, Congress passed this legislation on a bipartisan basis in both the House and the Senate.
27

28           44.     Now, Uber has no choice—it must face sexual-assault survivors’ claims publicly in court, not through secret settlements or private arbitration. But now that survivors can claim their day in court,

1 Uber is going after them with every trick in the playbook used to demean and attack survivors of sexual
2 assault, including routinely using the fact of their intoxication to question their credibility. London Decl.
3 ¶ 28.

5 45. And Uber continues to seek yet more ways to silence, divide, and conquer survivors—by 6 trying to force them out of their chosen forum, and seeking to prevent them from even participating in
7 coordinated proceedings where they can find strength and comfort in numbers. London Decl. ¶ 28 &
8 Ex. E (Uber’s latest motion to enforce its “non-consolidation clause” in the terms of use of its app).

10 46. But because Uber can no longer block sexual-assault survivors from going to court, it has 11 also shifted its energy to making it as difficult as possible for them do so. In 2022, Uber backed another
12 ballot initiative, in Massachusetts, that deployed “murky language . . . bur[ied]” in the initiative to 13 preclude people from suing Uber for negligence or assault by its drivers. Koussa, 489 Mass. at 833, 838.
14 The Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court unanimously struck it from the ballot. Id.; see Nate
15 Raymond, Massachusetts court blocks gig worker ballot measure backed by Uber, Lyft, Reuters (June 14, 2022),
16 <https://perma.cc/HQD5-49H8>. Uber now appears to be employing a similar strategy to shield itself
17 from suit in Nevada.
18

19 Uber’s latest effort to prevent people from suing the company

20 47. On March 18, 2024, a group created by Uber called “Nevadans for Fair Recovery PAC”
21 filed a proposed initiative petition. App. Ex. 1 (Initiative Petition). The officers of the PAC are all 22 lobbyists for Uber. App. Ex. 1 (PAC Registration Form).

23
24 48. Despite being bankrolled by a massive corporation that is currently fighting to suppress 25 hundreds of lawsuits by sexual assault survivors, the stated purpose of the PAC is “[t]o support issues 26 related to victim recovery.” Id.

27
28 49. The proposed initiative would amend Title 1, Chapter 7 of the Nevada Revised Statutes as follows:

1 Sec. 2. 1. For causes of action arising after January 1, 2027, an attorney shall not contract
2 for or collect a fee contingent on the amount of recovery for representing a person seeking
3 damages in a civil case in excess of twenty percent of the amount of recovery.

4 2. The limitation set forth in subsection 1 applies to all forms of recovery, including, without 5 limitation, settlement, arbitration and judgment.

6 3. For the purposes of this section, “recovered” means the net sum recovered by the plaintiff
7 or plaintiffs after deducting any disbursements or costs incurred in connection with the 8 prosecution or settlement of the claim.

9 50. In addition to imposing a 20% cap on plaintiffs’ attorneys’ fees, the proposed statute
10 would therefore also change the formula for calculating a recovery. The current contingency fee cap for 11 medical malpractice actions states: “For the purposes of this section, ‘recovered’ means the net sum 12 recovered by the plaintiff after deducting any disbursements or costs incurred in connection with the 13 prosecution or settlement of the claim. Costs of medical care incurred by the plaintiff and general and 14 administrative expenses incurred by the office of the attorney are not deductible disbursements or costs.”
15 NRS 7.095(3). While section 2.3 of the new initiative parrots the first sentence, it drops the entire second 16 sentence.

17 51. The filing also includes a proposed “description of effect,” App. Ex. 1 (Description of 18 Effect), which consists entirely of the following 94 words:

19 If enacted, this initiative will limit the fees an attorney can charge and receive as a
20 contingency fee in a civil case in Nevada to 20% of any amount or amounts recovered, 21 beginning in 2027.

22 In Nevada currently, most civil cases do not limit an attorney’s contingent fee percentages,
23 except that such fees must be reasonable. Current law does, however, limit attorney fees in 24 medical malpractice cases to 35% of any recovery, and caps contingency fees for a private attorney contracted to represent the State of Nevada to 25% of the total amount recovered.

25 52. Uber’s lobbyists then launched a media campaign in support of the proposal.

26 53. A press release containing a series of similarly worded quotes set out the initiative’s 27 purpose. “[A] small number” of “billboard attorneys have co-opted the court system at the expense of 28 victims and businesses,” the press release warned, and the initiative was needed to “protect plaintiffs’

1 judgments,” “put victims first,” “protect the people actually doing the work,” and “reduce costs for
2 Nevadans.” App. Ex. 2 (Press Release). The initiative thus supposedly “protects victims, reduces paydays
3 for some of the richest attorneys in the country, while helping reduce costs for Nevadans.” Id.

5 54. The press release acknowledged that the initiative was “led by Uber,” the point of contact
6 was an Uber lobbyist, and the lead quote was from the “head of Government Affairs for Uber in 7 Nevada”—a New York-based lobbyist who unironically warned about a system where large sums of 8 money are spent on “lobbying.” Id.

10 55. And while the press release portrayed the initiative as already having broad “support 11 from business and workers alike,” it cited only two groups that were not employed by Uber—one of 12 which, the Retail Association of Nevada, then had to quickly clarify that this was done “without its 13 permission and it ‘will not be participating in this effort.’”<sup>3</sup>

14 Uber’s proposal misleads Nevadans about its scope and effect.

15
16 56. To prevent proponents of initiatives from hijacking the process by misleading and 17 confusing voters, Nevada law imposes two key requirements on initiatives and petitions.

19 57. First, an initiative may “[e]mbrace but one subject and matters necessarily connected
20 therewith and pertaining thereto.” NRS 295.009(1)(a). This is violated if the initiative’s purpose “fails to 21 provide sufficient notice of the wide array of subjects addressed ... or the interests likely to be affected by 22 it.” Nevadans for Prop. Rts. v. Sec’y of State, 122 Nev. 894, 909 (2006).

23
24 58. Second, a petition must include “a description of the effect of the initiative.” NRS
25 295.009(1)(b). This must summarize “what the initiative is designed to achieve and how it intends to 26 reach those goals.” Educ. Freedom PAC v. Reid, 138 Nev. Adv. Op. 47, 512 P.3d 296, 304 (2022). “The 27 importance of the description of effect cannot be minimized, as it is what the voters see when deciding

1 whether to even sign a petition.” Coal. for Nevada’s Future v. RIP Com. Tax, Inc., 2016 WL 2842925, No.
2 69501 (Nev. May 11, 2016) (unpublished disposition).

3           59. Uber’s initiative and petition violate both of these requirements. Because Uber knows
4 that Nevada voters wouldn’t support a plan to make survivors of sexual assault play by different rules
5 than multi-billion-dollar corporations, the initiative is designed to hide its true scope. And because Uber
6 knows that Nevadans don’t want to shift costs for corporate wrongdoing from the companies to the 7 taxpayer, Uber has crafted its initiative to hide these effects. But the initiative process is designed to make 8 sure the will of the people is reflected in lawmaking, not to allow big companies to sneak through 9 initiatives that say one thing and do another.
10

12                           Uber’s proposal puts corporations first and victims last.

13           60. Uber touts its proposal in altruistic terms. Its press statements declare that the company
14 bankrolled the proposal out of a desire to “put victims first”—helping them maximize their recoveries for 15 the injuries caused by Uber. App. Ex. 4 (Las Vegas Review-Journal Article). Stated another way, 16 whereas Uber believes that it should be able to pay its own attorneys whatever it wants, it takes the 17 position that its adversaries in court—sexual-assault survivors and other victims of its wrongdoing—
18 would be best served by laws that sharply limit their fee arrangements with attorneys. A 20% fee cap
19 would make its victims better off, says Uber, because it would put more money in their pockets.
20

21           61. But the proposal is sure to have the opposite effect—just as Uber intends. That is 22 because, although the proposal purports to focus exclusively on how to divvy up the proceeds of a case
23 after it has ended, the proposal is actually about something very different: preventing victims from even 24 being able to bring their claims and hold corporations accountable in the first place.
25

26           62. “Contingent fee agreements between attorneys and their clients generally allow a client
27 without financial means to obtain legal access to the civil justice system.” O’Connell, 134 Nev. at 559
28 (Nev. App. 2018). The Nevada Supreme Court and courts across the country have accordingly

1 recognized the “public policy justifications supporting contingency-fee agreements.” Capriati Constr. Corp.
2 v. Yahyavi, 137 Nev. 675, 680 (2021); see also Munger, Reinschmidt & Denne, L.L.P. v. Lienhard Plante, 940
3 N.W.2d 361, 366–67 (Iowa 2020) (contingency fees “enable persons who could not otherwise afford
4 counsel to assert their rights”) (compiling cases).

6 63. Most ordinary people couldn’t hope to take on a big company unless “someone else was 7 willing to front the funds for attorneys and fees,” which in the case of contingency fees is the attorney
8 themselves. In re Abrams & Abrams, P.A., 605 F.3d 238, 246 (4th Cir. 2010). Contingency fees are 9 therefore “the key to the courthouse door” and courts would commit legal error “in failing to consider 10 the access to the legal system that contingency fees ... provide.” Id.

11
12 64. And because contingency fees are necessary for many ordinary people to obtain counsel,
13 “reducing them would impair claimants’ ability to secure representation.” Abrams, 605 F.3d at 245
14 (quoting Wells v. Sullivan, 907 F.2d 367, 371 (2d Cir.1990)). That is because “[s]adly, a plaintiff
15 sometimes has little to offer a lawyer other than his personal plight.” Id. “As an advocate before the 16 Kentucky Supreme Court noted as early as 1823, in the absence of contingency fees a client ‘may not 17 have any thing else to give, and without the aid of the matter in the contest, he can never sue for his 18 right, not having otherwise the means to employ counsel.’” Id. (quoting Rust v. Larue, 14 Ky. (4 Litt.) 411, 19 421 (Ky. 1823)).

20
21 65. The predictable effects of Uber’s proposal are detailed in a declaration by Herbert
22 Kritzer, “widely viewed as the leading academic on contingent fee representation.” David L. Schwartz,
23 The Rise of Contingent Fee Representation in Patent Litigation, 64 Ala. L. Rev. 335, 338 n.5 (2012). Professor 24 Kritzer explains that, contrary to Uber’s public messaging, Uber’s proposal “would in fact decrease
25 victims’ ability to recover for their injuries and violations of their rights because it would make it
26 significantly harder for them to obtain competent representation.” Kritzer Decl. ¶ 4.
27
28

1           66.       The reasons for this, Dr. Kritzer explains, are the same reasons that courts have
2 recognized for decades: Most people with potential legal claims—whether they are sexual-assault
3 survivors or first responders hurt on the job—“lack the resources to hire an attorney on an hourly-fee
4 basis” to vet their claims, build a case, prosecute the case to trial, and cover legal expenses. Kritzer Decl.
5 ¶ 33. Even those who could afford to pay an attorney by the hour would often “be unwilling (or unable)
6 to take the risk that they might obtain no recovery or the recovery that they do obtain will be less than 7 their legal expenses.” Id. He therefore agrees that a contingency fee is thus the “key to the courthouse”
8 for most people. Kritzer Decl. ¶ 34. It is their only way to obtain legal representation because it is the 9 only arrangement that meets all three of their needs at once: providing them not only with legal services,
10 but also with much-needed financing and insurance services. See Kritzer Decl. ¶¶ 5, 22.

13           67.       A lawyer will agree to provide all these services—to perform legal work, front the 14 litigation costs, and shoulder the risk of non-payment—only if the percentage is enough to justify it.
15 Kritzer Decl. ¶ 22. The percentage dictated by the market (typically between 33% and 40%) is enough
16 in many cases. Cut that number in half, however, and the calculus would change dramatically. Kritzer
17 Decl. ¶¶ 41–42.

19           68.       A simple hypothetical makes this clear. Uber says that the proposal benefits victims
20 because it gives them a larger share of the recovery. On that logic, the proposal would be even more
21 victim-friendly if it capped the fees at 10% or 5% (or better yet, 1%). But it is self-evident that a cap of 22 1% or 5% would not just place a limit on contingency-fee arrangements; it would eradicate them
23 altogether. And that it is exactly what Uber’s proposal is designed to do for many cases.

25           69.       The proposal, then, would not simply reduce the attorneys’ share of any recovery at the 26 conclusion of a case. It would, as Dr. Kritzer explains, “reduce fees to such an extent that it would not be
27 economical for attorneys to represent most clients”—at the outset—“in a wide range of cases where people
28 have been harmed or their rights have been violated.” Kritzer Decl. ¶ 6. “That would sharply decrease

1 the availability of legal services in Nevada because law firms could not handle a large proportion of the 2 current cases that they handle on a contingency-fee basis, and most potential clients would not be able to 3 proceed if required to pay their attorney on an hourly-fee basis.” Id.

5 70. This conclusion is echoed by another contingency-fee expert, conservative scholar Brian 6 Fitzpatrick. As Professor Fitzpatrick explains, Uber’s proposal “is likely to reduce the number of 7 meritorious suits against companies like Uber because there will be some suits for which the difference
8 between, for example, a 33% and 20% contingency fee will make it unprofitable for a lawyer to file” suit.
9 Fitzpatrick Decl. ¶ 6. Hence, “many victims will recover nothing at all as a result of the proposal because 10 it would disincentivize private lawyers from agreeing to prosecute cases that they would otherwise have 11 been incentivized to take on.” Fitzpatrick Decl. ¶ 5. And “even if the proposal would not disincentivize 12 private lawyers from altogether prosecuting a case, it will diminish their incentives to invest time and 13 money in cases, which might again leave victims worse off on net.” Id.

15 71. “None of this,” Professor Fitzpatrick points out, “is surprising.” Id. “[T]he people who 16 are in the best position to know how much they need to pay their lawyers to maximize their net
17 recoveries are the victims themselves”—not their adversaries in court. Fitzpatrick Decl. ¶ 8. “It is their 18 lives and their money,” which “is why we usually trust voluntary market transactions to set prices in 19 modern economies rather than central planners.” Id. That is especially true when the central planner is a 20 company that is far “more likely to be sued by people who hire lawyers on contingency than to hire
21 lawyers on contingency” itself. Fitzpatrick Decl. ¶ 9. Uber, of course, “does not want to maximize
22 plaintiffs’ net recoveries; it wants to minimize their recoveries.” Id. Naturally, its proposal would do exactly 23 that.
24
25

26 72. Just how effective would its proposal be at eliminating legal services for ordinary 27 Nevadans? Dozens of declarations from lawyers across a range of practice areas—including workers’
28

1 compensation, sexual assault, civil rights, eminent domain, insurance law, personal injury, patent law,
2 consumer protection, social security, and commercial litigation—give some indication of the answer.

3           73. One attorney, for instance, states that in his experience representing sexual-assault
4 survivors, Uber’s proposal “would make it nearly impossible to take on cases against rideshare
5 companies when their drivers sexually assault passengers,” even if the facts are egregious. Hyman Decl.
6 ¶ 11. His firm would be forced to stop taking these cases “on a contingency-fee basis because 20% is 7 insufficient to cover [the] time spent, costs advanced, and [nonrecovery] risk.” Hyman Decl. ¶ 10. The 8 firm could take such cases only for an hourly fee. Id. But its clients “are usually lower income, blue-collar
9 workers, or people who cannot afford to hire an attorney on an hourly basis.” Hyman Decl. ¶ 7. And 10 “few, if any,” would be “willing to consider paying hourly” even if they could afford it, as they would be 11 stuck with the entire bill and no recovery if the company prevails in court. Hyman Decl. ¶ 10.

12           74. Others who frequently represent survivors of sexual assault or harassment share in this 13 opinion. One attorney states that, if Uber’s proposal were to become law, his “firm would take few, if 14 any, of the more factually complex cases with liability disputes,” including cases on behalf of survivors of 15 “sexual assault and harassment,” who typically cannot pay by the hour. Watkins Decl. ¶¶ 4, 13. Another
16 whose “case load consists of sexual harassment cases” and other civil-rights cases states that his firm,
17 which operates on a shoestring budget in northern Nevada, would no longer be “financially solvent”
18 were the proposal to take effect. Mausert Decl. ¶¶ 5–7. That would have a devastating effect on many 19 Nevadans, because as it stands, “[a]most every attorney in northern Nevada who advertises in the field
20 of sexual harassment provides representation to employers, not employees.” Mausert Decl. ¶ 6; see also Morris Decl.
21 ¶¶ 11–20 (attorney testifying that, if the proposal were passed, her firm could no longer take many 22 sexual-assault cases because it would be cost-prohibitive to do so).

23           75. So, to use the words of another attorney who specializes in this area: Uber’s proposal
24 “would make it much harder for survivors of sexual assault or sexual harassment to come forward,
25
26
27
28

1 obtain qualified counsel, and seek redress in the civil justice system in our state.” Jacob Leavitt Decl.
2 ¶ 12. Sexual-assault cases “are not easy to litigate. They entail risk, time, and costs. If lawyers cannot 3 break even on these cases, it is much less likely that survivors will be able to find competent counsel.” Id.
4 In his view, “that is exactly why Uber is proposing this initiative now—it wants survivors to be silenced.”
5 Id. And he would know: His firm currently represents a person who was drugged in Nevada by an Uber
6 driver who was a registered sex offender—a fact that even a minimally adequate background check
7 would have uncovered. Jacob Leavitt Decl. ¶¶ 4–8.

9           76.     Yet it is not just sexual-assault survivors who would be affected by Uber’s sweeping
10 proposal. A broad coalition of advocates representing diverse interests—encompassing leaders of police
11 unions, legal-aid attorneys, patent attorneys, and even attorneys who have spent their careers litigating
12 on behalf of insurance companies—have come together to voice their concerns about the proposal’s
13 effects on the people of the state. They all tell a similar story: that most people who are in need of legal 14 services are ordinary Nevadans in a particularly vulnerable position; that unlike the Ubers of the world,
15 these people cannot afford to pay a lawyer by the hour to represent them, running the risk of being stuck
16 with legal bills if they do not prevail; that contingency fees are therefore the only way they can obtain
17 legal representation; and that Uber’s proposal would have a dramatic effect on their ability to find 18 representation.

19           77.     The President of the Reno Police Protective Association, for example, explains how 20 police officers who are injured in the line of duty will often “have modest and low-value workers
21 compensation claims.” Waddle Decl. ¶ 10. These officers “will be significantly harmed” by the proposal
22 because their ability to find an attorney will be “significantly limited.” Id.

23           78.     The attorneys who represent them underscore the point. One lawyer who represents 24 injured first responders estimates that his firm would no longer be able to represent “at least” half of its 25 clients, “and probably far more than that,” because the firm would have to shift to an hourly billing
26
27
28

1 structure for many cases, which “isn’t anywhere in the realm of possibility for most working men and
2 women in Nevada.” Mills Decl. ¶¶ 3–4, 6, 11. Other workers-compensation attorneys paint a similarly
3 dire picture. See, e.g., Kampschorr Decl. ¶¶ 6, 8 (“[We] would have to decline a significant number of
4 cases (75%) due to the cost of the law firm to handle the claim, compared to what fee the law firm could
5 recover”—“making it impractical to represent injured workers,” “decimat[ing] the Workers’
6 Compensation practice,” and “leav[ing] injured workers in a far worse position if they have little to no
7 access to justice.”); Gallagher Decl. ¶ 7 (“I don’t know of any lawyers who would represent clients [in 8 workers’ compensation cases] under [a 20% cap]—it is just not feasible.”).

10 79. Many other attorneys who represent people injured by corporate wrongdoing (abuse in a 11 nursing home, say, or a defective product) likewise testify that they “would not be able to agree to 12 represent most of the clients [they] currently do” if the proposal were to become the law. Ellis Decl. ¶ 12.
13 They “may even be unable to continue operating.” Id.; see, e.g., Hicks Decl. ¶ 16 (“If this initiative passed,
14 the required fee cap would prevent us from taking the vast majority of cases on a contingency fee
15 basis”—“around 95% of the thousands of clients we have helped would have been turned away due to 16 their inability to pay an hourly fee and case costs.”); Chumbler Decl. ¶ 7 (“[T]his initiative would put my 17 firm out of the business of helping injured clients. It would either go out of business entirely or I would 18 have to shift my practice to a different area of law.”); Jones Decl. ¶ 8 (“[T]his initiative would put me out
19 of business or force me to move into another area of law after thirty-one years of practice.”); Cameron
20 Decl. ¶ 6 (“[T]his initiative would essentially force our firm to either (1) no longer accept 80 – 90% of the 21 cases we currently take on contingency, (2) force the law firm to shut down leaving our staff
22 unemployed,” or “(3) force me and any of our attorneys to look for new work out of state or in a different
23 field of law.”). Moss Decl. ¶ 7 (testifying that the firm would abandon “the majority[] of our practice”
24 and no longer “handle cases involving victims of medical negligence, dangerous products and most cases
25 involving dangerous conditions on property”); Mainor Decl. ¶ 7 (“My practice would easily be cut in 26
27
28

1 half, at least.”); Granda Decl. ¶ 11 (“If a 20% contingency fee cap were put in place, we would very
2 likely stop handling medical malpractice cases and product defect cases in Nevada.”).

3 80. Other types of legal services, too, would dry up. Landowners whose property was seized
4 by the government would have difficulty finding a lawyer to represent them. See James Leavitt Decl. ¶ 8
5 (“[T]his initiative could prevent most landowners (who cannot afford to spend $20,000-$100,000 a
6 month to keep up with the government’s private attorneys and their unlimited resources) from pursuing 7 their constitutional right to just compensation.”). Social-security claimants would be at risk of losing their
8 benefits. See, e.g., Mosich Decl. ¶ 14 (“[I]t may prove necessary to stop handling all Supplemental
9 Security Income cases due to the cost to the law firm to handle the claim, compared to what fee the law
10 firm could recover.”). Patent owners would find it harder to protect their patents. See Benns Decl. ¶ 5
11 (“[I]t would make it extremely difficult, if not impossible, for us to consider representing Nevada
12 businesses or individuals in patent cases on a contingent-fee basis.”). Small business owners would suffer.
13 See Simon Decl. ¶ 8 (explaining that contingency business litigation would become “difficult, if not 14 impossible”). And consumers and workers throughout Nevada could no longer vindicate important 15 rights. See Kind Decl. ¶ 18 (“[A] twenty percent cap on contingency fees would seriously discourage
16 excellent attorneys from starting a new consumer protection practice or to represent a client in a small-
17 dollar case, even if the case is meritorious.”); Keyser-Cooper Dec. ¶ 17 (“[T]his initiative would make it
18 impossible for me to function ... The [civil-rights] clients I represent would not find representation. No 19 lawyer would want their cases.”).

20 81. All of these people—ordinary Nevadans from all walks of life—would be worse off under 21 Uber’s proposal. Insurance companies would take notice and “utilize their knowledge of their insured’s 22 dire financial straits to pressure their insured to accept far less than their claim would be worth, knowing 23 that the insureds would not be able to afford to retain an attorney on an hourly basis to pursue their 24 claims.” Leverty Decl. ¶ 11. As one attorney with two decades of experience litigating on behalf of 25
26
27
28

1 insurance companies admits, “if this petition is passed as drafted, my strategy for handling injury cases as 2 a defense attorney would change, particularly with smaller value cases.” Temple Decl. ¶ 6. Because
3 “plaintiffs’ attorneys and injured individuals would not want to pursue litigation where considerable costs
4 would be incurred,” it would be in the insurance companies’ “best interests to conduct extensive 5 discovery, retain experts, and prolong resolution to increase case costs.” Id.

7 82. That means that Uber’s proposal, in addition to driving out meritorious claims, would 8 drive up the costs of litigation. And although Uber claims that the proposal would reduce the number of 9 “frivolous lawsuits” in Nevada, experts who have studied the issue have concluded that the opposite is 10 true. As Dr. Kritzer explains, “contingency fees reduce frivolous litigation because contingency-fee
11 attorneys lack an incentive to devote their valuable time to such cases.” Kritzer Decl. ¶ 50. “Contingency
12 fees therefore serve a valuable screening function, eliminating most nonmeritorious cases.” Kritzer Decl.
13 ¶ 7; see also, e.g., Carter Decl. ¶ 11 (“The screening procedures we have in place for complex and risky 14 cases are extensive, particularly because the costs to litigate them are extremely high.”).

16 83. Uber’s proposal “would dramatically weaken this screening function.” Kritzer Decl. ¶ 8.
17 By “reducing the prevalence of contingency-fee arrangements, the initiative would increase the 18 prevalence of frivolous or non-meritorious litigation.” Id. Thus, as even leading proponents of tort
19 reform have found in a study published by the American Enterprise Institute, fee caps like the one
20 proposed by Uber “produce unintended negative consequences”—they “wash more low-value ‘junk
21 suits’ into the legal system.” See Alex Tabarrok & Eric Helland, Two Cheers for Contingent Fees 2–3 (AEI 22 2005).

25 84. If fee caps were really as beneficial as Uber claims, one would expect the proposal to 26 apply to plaintiffs and defendants alike. But it does not. Despite its sweeping breadth, the proposal is 27 tellingly limited in one important respect: It applies only to plaintiffs—an imbalance that goes
28 unmentioned in the description of effect. Hinkle Decl. ¶ 13; see also, e.g., Carter Decl. ¶¶ 6, 19 (“The

1 contingency fee arrangement provides our clients with the opportunity to level the playing field”; “[c]aps
2 on personal injury fees,” by contrast, “will create an incredibly uneven playing field.”). “The description
3 of effect not only fails to acknowledge this one-sidedness, it furthers the deception by misstating that, ‘if
4 enacted, this initiative will limit the fees an attorney can charge and receive as a contingency fee in a civil
5 case in Nevada.’” Hinkle Decl. ¶ 13. But that isn’t true. “The language of the petition does not restrict 6 the contingency fee a defense attorney can charge in a ‘reverse’ contingency fee case, as described by the 7 ABA in Formal Opinion 93-373,” where the fees are “based on payments avoided.” Id.

9 85. Uber also misleadingly presents contingency fees as a way that attorneys take advantage
10 of their clients. But as many Nevada attorneys report, their clients strongly prefer contingency fees “for a 11 number of reasons.” Valiente Decl. ¶ 8. And as courts have recognized, contingency fees “align the 12 interests of lawyer and client” because “[t]he lawyer gains only to the extent his client gains.” Kirchoff v.
13 Flynn, 786 F.2d 320, 325 (7th Cir. 1986). Indeed, “contingency fee agreements transfer a significant 14 portion of the risk of loss to the attorneys taking a case,” since they are the ones who will cover the costs
15 of litigation if the case is unsuccessful. Portsmouth 2175 Elmhurst, LLC v. City of Portsmouth, 837 S.E.2d 504, 16 516 (Va. 2020).

17
18
19 Uber’s proposal misleads Nevadans about its scope.

20 86. The accounts of Nevada attorneys and the ordinary people they serve illustrate just how 21 much Nevadans will be misled and deceived about the true scope of the initiative. Uber wants Nevadans
22 to think that the initiative targets a “small number” of “billboard attorneys,” presumably attorneys who 23 work on car accident or personal injury cases. Press Release, App. Ex. 2 (Press Release). That is entirely 24 misleading, with drastic results.

25
26 87. The initiative does not define the extremely broad term “a civil case.” App. Ex. 1
27 (Initiative Petition). This means it would cover a staggering range of cases that are often brought on 28 contingency, including:

- 1 a. Patent and other intellectual property cases. Bennis Decl. ¶¶ 2, 5; Kritzer Decl. ¶ 32.
- 2 b. Law enforcement officers and first responders injured in the line of duty. Waddle

16 88. These different kinds of cases all implicate different interests that will be harmed by the 17 initiative. Take the strong public interest in promoting innovation by allowing the inventor in her garage
18 to defend her intellectual property against a massive company. Kritzer Decl. ¶ 32 n.16. There's also the 19 taxpayers' interest in policing fraud against state healthcare systems. Then there's property owners'
20 interests in just compensation when their property is taken by the government. Small business owners
21 need to be able to get representation to make sure that bigger companies turn square corners. There's 22 the interest of members of pension and retirement funds in protecting the savings they built up over a
23 lifetime against unscrupulous financial institutions. And there's the public interest in safety that comes 24 from making sure Nevada law enforcement and first responders get the care they need when they are 25 injured protecting the rest of us.

26 89. But ordinary people aren't born knowing the scope and variety of civil litigation, and they 27 will be misled about the exceptional breadth and effects of the initiative.

28 90. Polling bears out that the description of effect—just on its own—will mislead ordinary Nevadans about the initiative's scope. A recent poll was conducted by a nationally recognized pollster of a representative sample of Nevadans. Miller Decl. ¶¶ 1-9. The poll provided respondents with “the

1 Description of Effect for this initiative petition exactly as submitted by ‘Nevadans for Fair Recovery,’ 2 then asked respondents both open-ended and multiple-choice questions about what they believed would
3 be the initiative’s effect, if passed.” Miller Decl. ¶ 8.

5 91. This polling found that Uber’s description of effect, on its own, misled and deceived
6 Nevadans about the initiative’s true reach.

7 92. Fully 45.9% of Nevadans “did not understand that the initiative would apply to sexual 8 assault lawsuits.” Miller Decl. ¶ 10(e). The fact that nearly half of Nevadans didn’t realize this is 9 particularly troubling because these are precisely the kinds of cases that Uber is most worried about and 10 is trying to suppress. And as noted above, Nevada lawyers who represent sexual assault survivors report
11 that the initiative would make it virtually impossible to sue large companies like Uber.
12

13 93. Similarly, “38.2% of Nevadans surveyed did not understand that the initiative would 14 apply to elder abuse lawsuits.” Miller Decl. ¶ 10(c).

15 94. And nearly one third of Nevadans “did not understand that the initiative would apply to 16 wrongful death lawsuits.” Miller Decl. ¶ 10(b).

17 95. In contrast, “82.1% of Nevadans surveyed understood that the initiative would apply to 18 car accident lawsuits.” Miller Decl. ¶ 10(a).

19 96. These results are no accident. As one of the country’s leading experts on public
20 perception of the justice system—Professor Michael McCann—explains: These polling results illustrate 21 “how decades of public relations campaigns by big companies like Uber have shaped the public’s view of 22 lawyers, such that people reflexively associate them with tropes about ‘ambulance chasers’ and ‘billboard
23 attorneys,’ not advocates for survivors of sexual assault or the families of victims of elder abuse.”
24 McCann Decl. ¶ 18.
25

26 97. For decades, “large corporate players and instrumental allies spent great amounts of 27 money to convince Americans that an epidemic of frivolous litigation arose in the 1970s, when, in fact,
28

1 no such epidemic existed.” McCann Decl. ¶ 24. Indeed, “there was no dramatic increase in tort or other
2 civil litigation during the time period in question, damage awards and lawyers’ fees did not increase
3 significantly, and most of the anecdotes offered as evidence by the proponents of this misleading
4 campaign were as baseless as the overall narrative.” McCann Decl. ¶ 27.

6 98. Unfortunately, “these efforts were too often successful at shaping public understanding.”
7 McCann Decl. ¶ 29. “Americans who were harmed by the wrongdoing of large corporations became 8 plaintiffs just trying to make a buck. The lawyers who helped those plaintiffs recover for their injuries
9 became ambulance chasers. And a necessary tool of corporate accountability became a crisis in our legal 10 system.” Id.

11
12 99. This helps explain why “[t]he ‘Nevadans for Fair Recovery’ proposal is so misleading on 13 its face.” McCann Decl. at 5. “What is particularly striking is that the description of effect only talks
14 about limits on attorney fees in ‘a civil case.’ But against the backdrop of decades of ‘tort reform’
15 messaging, that seemingly neutral phrasing meant that nearly half of Nevadans polled did not 16 understand the true scope of this initiative.” McCann Decl. ¶ 18.

17
18 100. This deceptiveness is compounded by Uber’s front organization and media campaign, 19 which draw on “the same misleading tropes.” McCann Decl. ¶ 35. The unsupported claims about 20 “billboard attorneys” who have “co-opted the court system” at the expense of victims and businesses
21 “are not based in evidence and are crafted only to protect large corporations from lawsuits and deny 22 ordinary Nevadans competent representation and by extension their day in court.” Id.

23
24 101. In sum, as the polling shows, Uber’s initiative will “fundamentally mislead voters” about 25 its true purpose and effects. McCann Decl. ¶ 36.

26 Uber’s proposal would shift costs from big corporations to Nevada taxpayers.

27
28 102. That is far from the only way that Uber’s initiative misleads and deceives Nevadans about its true consequences. Uber styled its petition so that the initiative will appear to save the State of 1 Nevada money. And polling shows that many ordinary Nevadans will come away with this impression.

2 But as with Uber’s other purported justifications, the actual effect will be exactly the opposite. By
3 depriving ordinary Nevadans of compensation for the harms they’ve suffered, the costs for those injuries
4 would shift from the parties responsible to the taxpayers. The initiative would therefore have dramatic
5 and lasting effects on core state programs. And as experts on the state’s healthcare system and budgeting
6 explain, “[t]he most significant impact to the State’s budget would be the loss of millions of dollars of 7 funds for reimbursing Nevada Medicaid.” Sasser-Norman Decl. ¶ 7.
8

9 Nevada Medicaid depends on recoveries in civil suits.

10 103. Nevada Medicaid relies on millions of dollars in reimbursements that come when big 11 companies like Uber compensate Nevadans for the harm that they caused.
12

13 104. Nevada Medicaid provides a wide range of health services to low-income Nevadans, 14 ranging from inpatient hospital stays to rural health clinics, from home health care to pediatric care, and 15 from prenatal care to nursing facilities. Sasser-Norman Decl. ¶ 16. Medicaid is a lifeline “for medical 16 and health-related services for America’s poorest people.” Sasser-Norman Decl. ¶ 14.
17

18 105. More Nevadans depend on Nevada Medicaid than ever before, as a result of the 19 Affordable Care Act expansion and the Covid-19 pandemic. As of February 2024, there are 882,833
20 Nevadans enrolled in Medicaid—nearly one-third of the state’s population. Sasser-Norman Decl. ¶ 17.<sup>4</sup>
21 That is an increase of 239,152 people in the last four years. Id.
22

23 106. To help pay for these services, Medicaid is “designed to minimize burdens on taxpayers
24 by recovering Medicaid expenditures from tortfeasors that cause the injuries requiring an individual to 25 rely on Medicaid.” Sasser-Norman Decl. ¶ 13.
26
27

28 <sup>4</sup> U.S. Census Bureau, QuickFacts: Nevada, <https://perma.cc/M39H-ER5W> (estimating population at 3,194,176 in 2023).

1           107. The way this works is straightforward: If Medicaid covered the health bills for a Nevadan
2 who was injured, and that person then recovers money from the party responsible for the injury,
3 Medicaid is reimbursed out of that recovery. Sasser-Norman Decl. ¶¶ 18–28; see also Kritzer Decl. ¶¶58– 4 59.

6           108. This ensures “that the State’s taxpayers do not become deep pockets (especially in cases
7 where third parties have been found liable for a Medicaid recipient’s injuries) and that taxpayer funds
8 are not used to subsidize culpable tortfeasors.” Sasser-Norman Decl. ¶ 28. In other words, as the Nevada
9 Supreme Court explained, this ensures “fairness to the taxpayers.” Turnbow v. Dep’t. of Hum. Res., 109
10 Nev. 493, 496 (2003).

11
12           109. Over a dozen state attorneys general recently echoed this point: “collect[ing]
13 reimbursements from[] liable third parties” is “a critical component of Medicaid.” Brief of Amici Curiae
14 States of Utah, Ohio, and 12 Other States in Support of Respondent, Gallardo v. Marsteller, No. 20-163, 15 2021 WL 5604965, at *18 (S. Ct. 2021). These reimbursements “save millions of dollars each year” and 16 “fairly place financial responsibility where it should be—on any tortfeasor responsible for the Medicaid
17 recipient’s injury.” Id. at *19.

18
19 The initiative would deprive Nevada Medicaid of millions of dollars.

20           110. This initiative would put those millions of dollars at risk and let tortfeasors off the hook.

21           111. That’s because “[m]aking it harder for Nevadans to find a lawyer does not make their 22 injuries go away—it just shifts the costs of those harms from the people responsible to the taxpayer.”
23 Sasser-Norman Decl. ¶ 4. The initiative would make it much harder for ordinary Nevadans who have 24 been injured to seek compensation, as set out above. And because “[s]erious injuries do not 25 discriminate,” this will land on the “small children, the elderly, single mothers, indigent citizens, [and]
26 undocumented people” that Nevada attorneys represent. Mainor Decl. ¶ 4.
27
28

1           112. When these low-income Nevadans cannot “secure competent counsel,” they will be “far
2 less likely to prevail on their claims or reach a settlement that meaningfully compensates them for the
3 injuries they suffered.” Sasser-Norman Decl. ¶ 33; see also Kritzer Decl. ¶ 34 n.32 (describing the 4 significantly lower success rate for pro se cases).

6           113. The effect on this vulnerable population will place an especially significant burden on 7 Medicaid; “[b]ecause low-income Nevadans are most likely to rely on Medicaid, if they cannot recover
8 for their injuries, the amount of money reimbursed to Medicaid will plummet.” Sasser-Norman Decl.
9 ¶ 30; see also Kritzer Decl. ¶ 9.
10

11           114. There are three primary ways that the initiative would cost Nevada Medicaid millions of 12 dollars and place serious strain on the program.

13           115. First, the initiative would jeopardize millions of dollars in direct reimbursements that 14 Medicaid receives each year. “The Division of Health Care Financing and Policy, which manages 15 Nevada Medicaid, estimated at least $3.8 million in subrogation recoveries for FY 2023 for its fee-for-
16 service claims alone.” Sasser-Norman Decl. ¶ 34. These reimbursements would be slashed if working-17 class Nevadans “face serious challenges” retaining “attorneys who work with cases involving sexual 18 assault victims, personal injury, wrongful death, elder abuse, and workers compensation.” Sasser-
19 Norman Decl. ¶ 32. But massively reducing direct reimbursements for Medicaid fee-for-service is far 20 from the only way that the initiative will harm the program.
21

23           116. Second, the initiative would jeopardize reimbursements to the managed-care organizations
24 that Nevada Medicaid relies on to implement the program. These include Anthem Blue Cross and Blue
25 Shield, Health Plan of Nevada, Molina Healthcare of Nevada, and SilverSummit Healthplan. Sasser-
26 Norman Decl. ¶ 34. These “managed-care organizations have their own subrogation-recovery systems
27 that result in a very substantial cost avoidance for Nevada Medicaid each year.” Id. And this subrogation
28 mechanism follows the same basic principle; if people who receive care from one of these managed care

1 organizations receive compensation from the party responsible, they will reimburse the cost of their
2 medical bills. But “[i]f the proposed initiative were passed and managed-care organizations were 3 therefore unable to subrogate their payments to tort recoveries, those payments would be reimbursed by 4 Nevada Medicaid instead.” Id. Given this, “the $3.8 million figure dramatically understates—perhaps by 5 orders of magnitude—the total impact on the state budget.” Id. In fact, experts estimate that when
6 accounting for the fact that nearly 80% of Nevada Medicaid recipients are enrolled in managed-care
7 organizations, the number likely “would be around $19 million.” Sasser-Norman Decl. ¶ 35. And that 8 still doesn’t come close to measuring the full amount of money the initiative would put at risk.

11 117. Third, hospitals will end up billing Medicaid when they can no longer recover
12 reimbursements through lawsuits by victims. When hospitals provide care to Nevadans who are eligible
13 for Medicaid, they have two options: (1) to bill Medicaid, or (2) seek reimbursement from any 14 compensation the victim receives through a lawsuit. Watkins Decl. ¶ 20. Hospitals’ practice is to seek 15 reimbursement from recovery in a lawsuit instead of seeking reimbursement from Nevada Medicaid.
16 Watkins Decl. ¶¶ 15–21. That is because hospitals recover significantly more in reimbursement from 17 litigation than from Medicaid. Id. But as a result, “[i]f this petition is implemented, our hospitals’
18 revenues will necessarily decrease, as there will be fewer tort claims to lien.” Watkins Decl. ¶ 22. These 19 significant costs will, once again, be passed along to Nevada Medicaid.
20

22 118. Nevada attorneys attest to just how much money their cases save the state and the 23 taxpayer. See, e.g., Moss Decl. ¶ 10 (“Each year our firm reimburses hundreds of thousands, some years
24 millions, to outside government entities such as Medicare and Medicaid as well as state hospitals that are 25 required to provide care to uninsured patients, workers compensation and third party insurers for care
26 and benefits.”); Jones Decl. ¶ 12 (“My firm has reimbursed Medicare, Medicaid, UMC, private insurers,
27 and hospitals in the millions of dollars, among other state and private funds.”); Gallagher Decl. ¶ 10
28 (“[O]ur firm alone recovers millions of dollars ... every single year” on behalf of “programs such as

1 Nevada Medicaid, Medicare, Nevada’s self-funded PEB health plans, local governments, Northeastern
2 Nevada Regional Hospital.”); Carter Decl. ¶ 22 (“Year after year, our firm reimburses Medicare,
3 Medicaid and other state, county, federal insurers, as well as private insurers and unions, in excess of 4 $1,000,000 for paid benefits.”); Watkins Decl. ¶ 14 (“Our firm has paid millions of dollars over the years
5 to Medicare, Medicaid, Medicaid Managed Care Organizations (MCO), TriCare, and ERISA plans on 6 subrogation claims, and similarly has paid millions to UMC and private hospitals on liens.”); Mills Decl.
7 ¶ 17 (firm reimbursed “no less than $1.1 million dollars” in recent years for “Nevada Medicaid,
8 University of Nevada Medical Center (a publicly funded hospital), and third-party administrators for 9 state, county and municipal agencies”); Mainor Decl. ¶ 9 (reimbursements lost from his firm alone
10 “would be in the hundreds of thousands of dollars a year specifically lost to these programs”); Granda 11 Decl. ¶ 14 (in recent years “our clients have paid back approximately $500,000 to Nevada Medicaid and 12 $200,000 to UMC”).

15           119. The initiative would put these needed funds at risk. In total, experts estimate that “the 16 initiative would cost the program millions of dollars in reimbursements.” Sasser-Norman Decl. ¶ 38. And 17 “[g]iven the increased pressures on Nevada Medicaid and the growing population that it serves, even a 18 loss of several hundred thousand dollars—much less millions of dollars—would have a dramatic and 19 profound effect.” Id.

21           120. Nor is Nevada Medicaid the only state health program that would suffer. The Children’s 22 Health Insurance Program (CHIP) “provides coverage to certain Nevada children who are not eligible 23 for traditional Medicaid.” Sasser-Norman Decl. ¶ 13. As of February 2024, over 36,000 Nevadans are 24 enrolled in CHIP.<sup>5</sup> Because CHIP relies on a similar subrogation mechanism to reimburse the program, 25

1 “the analysis of how [Uber’s initiative] will impact the Nevada Medicaid budget applies to CHIP in the 2 exact same manner.” Id. Uber doesn’t mention that either.

3 The initiative would overwhelm already strained legal aid organizations.

4 121. Because legal aid organizations in Nevada cannot, on their own, hope to handle the legal 5 needs of working-class Nevadans, they rely on “an ecosystem of support” in the form of private
6 attorneys. Sasser-Norman Decl. ¶ 9. Legal aid organizations “refer out hundreds of cases to the private
7 bar in Nevada every year—cases that Legal Services is ill equipped to handle because of limited
8 resources and the overwhelming legal needs of our community.” Id. As a result, “the gap in access to 9 legal representation created by this initiative would have a direct impact on our Legal Services
10 providers.” Id.

12
13 122. The Nevada Supreme Court Access to Justice Commission described the scope of the 14 problem:

15 The disparity between the number of low-income people needing legal help and the 16 capacity of legal aid to provide it amounted to more than 112,000 unmet legal needs in 17 2017...This means that three out of four low-income Nevadans who seek to protect their 18 families, their homes, and their livelihoods in a legal crisis must proceed in court without 19 legal help.

20 Ken Smith, Ph.D. & Kelly Thayer, M.A., Nevada Legal Needs and Economic Impact Study: Final Report
(October 31, 2018).<sup>6</sup>

21 123. In other words, “[t]he problem of unmet legal need in Nevada is already dire” and “[t]his 22 initiative would only make it worse.” Sasser-Norman Decl. ¶ 10. “The result would be an increased 23 burden on our already strapped legal-services providers.” Id.

1 The initiative would harm the Victims of Crime Program and those who rely on it.

2 124. Other important state programs also rely on reimbursements from civil suits. The Victims
3 of Crime Program uses state and federal funding to “to provide assistance to persons who are victims of 4 violent crime or the dependents of those victims.” Sasser-Norman Decl. ¶ 40. The covered crimes
5 include sexual assault, domestic violence, child abuse, elder abuse, and homicide. Sasser-Norman Decl.
6 ¶ 41. The fund helps victims of these serious crimes to cover costs associated with the crime, such as 7 hospital bills, mental health counseling, and wage loss, among many others. Sasser-Norman Decl. ¶ 44.
8 Like with Medicaid, if the victim recovers compensation from the perpetrator, Nevada can subrogate
9 that amount. NRS 217.240. And “[w]hen money is recovered by the Victims of Crime Program, that 10 money is allocable to other victims.” Sasser-Norman Decl. ¶ 45(c).
11

12 125. Here too, the initiative will have damaging results for the state budget and vulnerable
13 Nevadans. Because Uber’s initiative “would dramatically limit low-income Nevadans’ ability to retain 14 counsel and recover for their injuries, this would also reduce the amount of money that is reimbursed
15 into the Victims of Crime Program.” Sasser-Norman Decl. ¶ 47. And “[t]he consequence of not 16 recovering this money means the Victims of Crime Program will have to be funded from the State’s 17 General Fund or that services to victims will be cut.” Sasser-Norman Decl. ¶ 45(c).
18

19 The initiative doesn’t inform Nevadans about these profound and prolonged effects on 20 the state budget.
21

22 126. The total harm the initiative would cause is massive. If it were to become law, the 23 initiative “would impose a significant fiscal burden—in the millions of dollars, if not tens of millions of 24 dollars—on the State of Nevada.” Sasser-Norman Decl. ¶ 48; Kritzer Decl. ¶ 63 (“state and local 25 government[s]” will lose “significant portion of the amounts returned to the state and local treasuries
26 through collecting on liens related to employee health insurance, workers’ compensation, the crime
27
28

1 victims' fund, and Medicaid"). This will "have a profound and lasting impact on the State's Medicaid
2 budget, as well as an impact on the Victims of Crime Program." Sasser-Norman Decl. ¶ 45.

3 127. But reimbursement-by-subrogation mechanisms aren't common knowledge. So by failing
4 to include any mention of these fiscal burdens, the initiative will deceive and mislead regular people—
5 who have no way of knowing that it would deprive a healthcare program on which a third of the state's
6 population rely of millions of dollars that the program can ill afford to lose. Nor will ordinary Nevadans
7 realize that the initiative will overwhelm the already stretched resources of Nevada legal aid providers or 8 cut off money to a state program that helps victims of violent crimes.

9 128. The polling bears this out. Nearly half of Nevadans were under the misimpression that the 10 initiative "would save the State of Nevada money." Miller Decl. ¶ 10(f).

11 129. Uber's deceptive messaging compounds this, falsely claiming that the initiative will 12 "reduce costs for Nevadans." App. Ex. 2 (Press Release). In fact, the initiative will reduce costs for Uber
13 and companies like it, while shifting the cost for the harms that they've caused onto Nevada taxpayers.

14 Uber's proposal also attempts to sneak through a dramatic change to how recovery is 15 calculated that would suppress claims even further.

16 130. To make things worse, Uber's initiative tries to sneak through another dramatic shift that 17 would suppress claims even further.

18 131. The description of effect compares the initiative to existing caps, such as the "limit [on]
19 attorney fees in medical malpractice cases to 35% of any recovery." App. Ex. 1 (Initiative Petition). This 20 makes it seem like the initiative is merely lowering the percentage. But that's misleading.

21 132. Under existing medical malpractice law, "'recovered' means the net sum recovered by the 22 plaintiff after deducting any disbursements or costs incurred in connection with the prosecution or 23 settlement of the claim. Costs of medical care incurred by the plaintiff ... are not deductible
24 disbursements or costs." NRS § 7.095(3). The initiative copies the first sentence, but entirely removes the 25
26
27
28

1 second. There is no explanation for this other than trying to ensure that contingency fees are only
2 calculated after the plaintiff’s medical costs are fully deducted from the recovery. See, e.g., Sw. Airlines Co.
3 v. Saxon, 596 U.S. 450, 457 (2022) (citing the “well-settled canon[] of statutory interpretation” known as 4 the “meaningful-variation canon”).

6 133. In many cases, that would slash attorneys’ fees as much or more than the reduced
7 percentage. In the vast majority of injury cases, recovery is anchored to the amount of the medical bills,
8 which can make up 40-50% of the total recovery. Watkins Decl. ¶ 27. Accordingly, if such bills are 9 subtracted from the amount of recovery before a contingency fee is calculated, an attorney wouldn’t get 10 20% of anything close to the actual amount recovered under current law, instead getting 20% of a vastly 11 smaller sum. Id. For some practices, if “the contingency fee is calculated after disbursement of medical 12 expenses and costs, the vast majority of cases would result in little to no fee in the majority of cases
13 brought by low-income Nevadans.” Carter Decl. ¶ 16; see also Moss Decl. ¶ 8 (amount would be “less 14 than 10% of the actual recovery”); Cameron Decl. ¶ 7; Watkins Decl. ¶ 27. This would mean that “a
15 wide variety of Nevadans would never have access to the Courts because it would be financially
16 unsustainable for any lawyer to assist with these cases.” Moss Decl. ¶ 8. Once again, the harm would be 17 greatest for “unemployed, low-income, and fixed-income tort victims, and/or those without health
18 insurance, as they would have difficulty in finding counsel to accept their cases with little to no fee
19 available.” Watkins Decl. ¶ 29.
20

22 134. But the description of effect does not mention this sea change. No wonder, then, that 23 polling found that virtually no Nevadans realized that attorneys would receive below 20% of recovery—
24 much less something significantly below 20%. Miller Decl. at 4. Instead, polling found that a majority of 25 Nevadans are confused about how contingency fees would be calculated. Id.
26
27
28

1 designed to achieve and how it intends to reach those goals.” Educ. Freedom PAC v. Reid, 138 Nev. Adv.
2 Op. 47, 512 P.3d 296, 304 (Nev. 2022). “The importance of the description of effect cannot be
3 minimized, as it is what the voters see when deciding whether to even sign a petition.” Coal. for Nevada’s
4 Future v. RIP Com. Tax, Inc., 2016 WL 2842925, at *2 (unpublished disposition). Uber’s description of 5 effect is deceptive, misleading, and inadequate.

7 142. First, Uber’s description of the initiative is deceptive, misleading, and inadequate because 8 it fails to alert Nevadans to its sweeping scope. As polling shows, the description misleads Nevadans into 9 thinking that this is a narrow proposal that targets “‘ambulance chasers’ and ‘billboard attorneys,’ not 10 advocates for survivors of sexual assault or the families of victims of elder abuse.” McCann Decl. ¶ 18.
11 Nor will regular Nevadans understand that this proposal extends to areas like patent law, eminent 12 domain, antitrust, fraud against the government, and so many others, each with their own sets of 13 interests and concerns.
14

15 143. Second, the description of effect is deceptive, misleading, and inadequate when it comes 16 to informing voters about the initiative’s purpose and significant consequences. The description does not 17 mention any purpose at all and has no title. But proponents present the purpose of the proposal as 18 helping victims obtain more compensation. In fact, the actual result would be the exact opposite. Because 19 contingency fees are the only way most working-class Nevadans can afford a lawyer, the initiative would 20 dramatically reduce the amount the victims can recover from big companies like Uber.
21

23 144. Third, the description of effect is deceptive, misleading, and inadequate because it fails to 24 inform potential signatories of the lasting and profound fiscal impact that the proposal would have on 25 Nevada Medicaid and other government programs. By making it far more difficult for regular Nevadans
26 to receive just compensation from big companies, the initiative would deprive Nevada Medicaid of 27 millions of dollars in reimbursement. The initiative would also lead to far more hospitals billing
28 Medicaid when currently they are paid out of recovery from the party actually responsible for the harm.

1 And the initiative would also overwhelm legal aid providers who are already stretched far too thin and
2 would deprive the state Victims of Crime fund of crucial reimbursements. Uber’s description mentions
3 none of these effects, and instead misleads Nevadans into thinking that the proposal would save the state
4 money.

6 145. Fourth, the description of effect is deceptive, misleading, and inadequate because it also 7 does not alert Nevadans to just how one-sided the initiative is. A regular reader would not realize that 8 the initiative would leave defendants entirely free to pay as much money in contingency fees as they 9 would like to secure the best legal representation possible, while tying the hands of ordinary Nevadans to 10 do the same.

11
12 146. Finally, the description of effect is deceptive, misleading, and inadequate because it fails
13 to mention the dramatic change in how recovery is calculated. Even though in many cases the proposal
14 would actually cap contingency fees at far less than 20% of recovery under current law, the description
15 of effect doesn’t mention anything about this. For many lawyers, this would mean that they would 16 recover little or no fee in many cases representing ordinary Nevadans. And by comparing the proposed 17 20% cap to the 35% medical malpractice cap, the description misleads readers into thinking this is an 18 apples-to-apples comparison.

20 THIRD CAUSE OF ACTION
21 (Violation of Full Text Rule)

22 147. Under the Nevada Constitution, “no law shall be revised or amended by reference to its 23 title only; but, in such case, the act as revised or section as amended, shall be re-enacted and published at 24 length.” Nev. Const. art. 4, § 17. In the context of petitions, “[e]ach referendum and initiative petition
25 shall include the full text of the measure proposed.” Nev. Const. art. 19, § 3(1). Nevada statutes also 26 require proponents of petitions to ensure that “each signer had an opportunity before signing to read the 27 full text of the act or resolution on which the initiative or referendum is demanded.” NRS 295.0575(6).
